

How sophisticated computer precision adds a new dimension to a century old success story

There are various forms of homoeopathy.

The classical approach seeks to apply the single remedy that simultaneously heals on emotional, mental and physical levels.

The therapeutic approach is perhaps the easiest to apply and for this reason is most popular amongst busy doctors who advocate homoeopathy.

The practical approach tailors the homoeopathic method to the needs of each client. It combines the single remedy with further supporting remedies to assist the major organs and pathways of elimination.

The sequential approach utilises a time-line of the client's medical history as a means of restoring balance. This method is used when the orthodox homoeopathic approach to treatment has not brought permanent relief – and often in situations that have been labelled incurable.

The spiritual approach is based upon practical observation and is unique to each individual homoeopath. Its use allows new remedies that would otherwise take too long to be formally assessed to be used in the healing process.

To all of these homoeopathic treatments John Rawlings has brought the application of sophisticated computer software to increase the precision of prescribed remedies, thereby adding a new dimension to homoeopathic treatment.

- Homoeopathy is a safe, gentle and effective system of medicine that addresses physical, mental and emotional issues.
- Homoeopathic remedies are unique in their method of preparation, non-toxic and without side effects.
- In his practice, John Rawlings uses the most up-to-date computer software to assist in the precision of the prescribed remedies.

Just a few of the conditions that can benefit from homoeopathic treatment

Homoeopathy

Focusing on the person rather than the ailment produces treatment that needs to be experienced to be understood

An introduction to its benefits by
John M Rawlings
Homoeopathic Practitioner

You are a person not a series of components

Homoeopathy treats not only the entire body, but also has a profound effect upon the state of mind and the emotions.

It is this integrated approach to treating the individual that makes homoeopathy different. It addresses core issues on many levels, thereby providing a multi-dimensional method of healing.

A scientific solution that has its origins in mankind's earliest history

Homeopathy's origins date back to the beginnings of time and its principles and methods span all cultures of the world.

The reason for its global acceptance is that generation after generation of people have seen how efficiently it works.

One simple example is the use of sea pebbles. Naturally coated in sodium chloride, they would provide a cure for the symptoms of dehydration. By placing the pebble on the tongue, the saline properties of the stone would pass to the dehydrated individual and ease their symptoms, while treating the salt deficiency due to excessive exposure to the sun.

The first person to give scientific credence to homoeopathy was Samuel Hahnemann. This pioneer systematically gave potentised medicines to healthy people. The resulting symptoms were then recorded and a medicine created that could be applied to the disease condition that needed to be remedied.

The medicine could then be applied in a homoeopathic manner – one in which the prescription resonated with the client's mental, emotional and physical state.

The law of similars or curing like with like

Most people are familiar with the allopathic medicine approach - the opposite of that used by homoeopathy. This allopathic approach treats disease by providing a stimulus to oppose the medical condition.

Homoeopathy, though, cures like with like. In simple terms, it uses the law of similars to encourage the body to fight its own battles. In fact the word Homoeopathy is derived from Greek words meaning same and suffering - and thereby provides a clue to the way in which it works.

Homoeopathy provides a curative energy tailored specifically for each individual. This stimulus triggers the inborn forces of the body to heal itself. In homoeopathy, disease is considered to have its own cure within itself.

"Many people turn to homoeopathy when medical treatment doesn't provide a cure, or they wish to avoid the side-effects of drugs."

John Rawlings developed a deep interest in how nature heals - naturally - very early on in life. Over the years, he has travelled extensively abroad and during this time he experienced many of the world's natural medicines and therapies in action. This has given him a unique perspective of the benefits of homoeopathic treatment.

Introducing a radionic service utilising electro-crystalline technology

The homoeopathic approach most widely known is the therapeutic one. Here emphasis is placed on pathogenic diagnosis, which leads to indicated homoeopathic remedies.

However, John Rawlings also offers a radionic service. This involves the transmission of a homoeopathic remedy over long or short distances using sophisticated crystalline technology. The service, which requires a sample of hair called a witness, has many benefits. In an emergency the client can be assisted with a remedy transmission sent to them wherever they may be.

An additional optional service that is included free for the duration of the first two consultations

The radionic service is something which many people need to experience to be convinced about. Therefore John Rawlings offers it free for the duration of two treatments. Do try it. It really can add extra momentum to the healing process.
